U. S. Army
Gen. Willard G. Wyman

Special to The New York Times.
FORT MONROE, Va., Feb. 28—Gen. Willard G. Wyman has been appointed to succeed Gen. John E. Dahlquist as commander of the Continental Army Command here tomorrow. General Dahlquist retires after thirty-nine years of active duty with the Army.

General Wyman recently was confirmed by the Senate for promotion to four-star rank to take over the command. General Dahlquist also was confirmed for retirement in the rank of full general. He entered the Army in 1917 and is one of the few non-West Point officers to reach four-star rank. General Wyman was graduated from the military academy in 1918.

Both officers saw action in Europe in both World Wars. General Wyman in 1952 and 1953 commanded North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces in southeast Europe and helped to develop the Turkish and Greek armies into formidable fighting forces.
